

Charter for the Province of Pennsylvania-1681

Historical Background of Document:

It was George Fox, not William Penn who first had the idea to establish a colony in America as a refuge for persecuted Quakers. Fox was an Englishman, the founder of the Quakers, and he had a strong passion for God.

The Quakers refused to pay taxes to carry on wars, and they met with great opposition for their beliefs. Their meetings were often broken up by government authorities and an act of Parliament pronounced them a "mischievous and dangerous people." It was not long until the Quakers, driven by persecution, began to migrate to America. Their reception in Massachusetts and elsewhere was anything but cordial, and this led them to turn their attention to founding a colony of their own. When William Penn, the son of Admiral Penn, a personal friend of the king, became an open convert to the Quaker faith, the small sect of believers became elated. The admiral, who initially was upset with his son's beliefs, soon forgave him, and William Penn became the most prominent Quaker in England.

The king of England owed Admiral Penn the sum of £16,000, and William Penn inherited the claim upon his father's death. At Penn's request King Charles granted him, in payment of this claim, a tract of forty thousand square miles in America. In the petition to the king, dated June, 1680, Penn asked for the territory west of the Delaware River and from the northern boundary of Maryland to the north "as far as plantable, which is altogether Indian." It was the largest grant ever made to one man in America. The charter was granted the following March. Penn had chosen the name New Wales for his province, but the king called it Pennsylvania in memory of the deceased admiral.
